The Summary

Roald Dahl was born in the United Kingdom. During his school years Roald was always busy and energetic, and often ended up in trouble. One of his earliest memories is speeding to school on his tricycle. His ability to find trouble made his early school years difficult. He left his first school after putting a dead mouse in a storekeeper's candy jar, a prank that led to him being beaten by his school principal.

From there he went to boarding school and then to an excellent private school, but Dahl described his school years as being full of “horrors” as a result of the “rules, rules, rules”.

Roald was not a very good student. But, his mother wanted to send him to college. But Roald refused to do. He told his mother, "No, thank you. I want to go straight from school to work for a company that will send me to wonderful faraway places like Africa or China."
